

Young Heroes Learn

Through The Tipping Point program, primary and secondary school students across Greece prepare for their future by interacting with mentors, professionals from a wide range of fields, during live group sessions.

By exploring fields of study and career paths that interest them, junior and senior high school students gain valuable insights into real-world opportunities within the modern labour market. Through the mentors' knowledge and day-to-day professional experience, students come to understand the latest developments and trends across various industries, while getting empowered to make informed academic and career choices.

At primary schools, younger students broaden their horizons by engaging in discussions on topics such as space exploration, robotics, the arts, and recycling. This early exposure helps them discover their interests and inspires them to plan their future.

The participation of students in The Tipping Point program is supported by Stoiximan as part of the corporate responsibility program "Young Heroes Learn".
